Shootout at the O.K. Corral

On October 26, 1881, a shootout between Wild West lawman Wyatt Earp and the Clanton-McLaury gang at the O.K. Corral in Tombstone, Arizona, lasted a mere 30 seconds.

The gunfight's legend would grow through the decades, enshrining the names Wyatt Earp and Doc Holliday in western lore and spawning countless books and movies.

Thanks to the discovery of silver, Tombstone, Arizona, became a mining boomtown, attracting hardworking miners and outlaws alike. Defending the town's law and order fell to the Earps: Virgil, the town marshal, and his brothers Morgan and the now-famous Wyatt, a former gambler, saloon keeper, gunslinger, and police officer. The Clantons and McLaurys, a gang of cattle rustlers and thieves, owned a cattle ranch outside of town. The Earps and the Clanton-McLaury gang represented the two sides of power in Tombstone, and on October 26 their violent power struggle ended in bloodshed.

Antagonism between the two factions escalated on October 25, when the Clanton-McLaury gang double-crossed Wyatt Earp over the spoils of a stagecoach robbery. By the next day, news of the tussle had spread, and other members of the gang vowed revenge against the Earps. But the Earps and their friend Doc Holliday were ready. The Clanton-McLaury gang was caught mustering in a vacant lot behind the O.K. Corral, and Virgil Earp wasted no time firing the first shot. Over the next 30 seconds, 30 shots were fired, and when the dust cleared, Virgil and Morgan Earp and Doc Holliday were wounded. Wyatt was unscathed. All but two members of the Clanton-McLaury gang were dead, and the two survivors had fled into the hills. It is mostly forgotten that there was another man present: Cochise County Sheriff John Behan. The sheriff charged both the Earps and Holliday with murder, but a Tombstone judge later declared the men not guilty, a judgment that likely helped to glorify Wyatt Earp and his famous Shootout at the O.K. Corral.

What's a Frappe?

October 7 is Frappe Day, and for many people this begs the question, "What is a frappe?" Denizens of America's northeast corner, known as New Englanders, know that a frappe is a milkshake blended with ice cream. But wait a minute—isn't a milkshake a blended drink made of milk, ice cream, and syrup? Not in New England. Up there, milkshakes don't include ice cream but only contain milk and syrup. To further confuse matters, travel to Rhode Island, where you'll likely find cabinet on the menu. A cabinet is a frappe uniquely made with coffee ice cream, coffee syrup, and milk. Why is this regional drink called a cabinet? One story suggests that soda jerks once kept coffee syrup in wooden cabinets behind the counter. Menus might also list tonic floats. In New England, tonic refers to most any carbonated beverage. Consider a tonic float similar to a root beer float, except you can substitute any flavor of tonic for the root beer and top it off with a scoop of ice cream.

Bottled Art

Artisans have been creating miniature models of fully rigged ships inside bottles for centuries. Perhaps you, too, could master this secret art on October 4, Ship in a Bottle Day. The first mention of putting objects, including ships, in bottles dates back to 1719, when the art was popularized by a German named Matthias Buchinger. What made the feat even more spectacular was that Buchinger was born without hands or legs and grew to only 29 inches tall. Despite these handicaps, Buchinger earned renown throughout Europe as an artist, magician, musician, marksman, calligrapher, and performer. From 1719, it became a common German folk art form to place objects in bottles, mainly depictions of saints. The oldest surviving ship in a bottle dates back to 1784. Ships in bottles were not only made by sailors to pass time on a long journey or to give as gifts, but historians think that many ships in bottles were created by lighthouse keepers, who had both the time and access to materials for creating these maritime models.

Skating Through History

The first wheels, invented around 3500 B.C., were not used for transportation but as potters' wheels for molding clay. It took 300 years before wheels were used to move chariots. And it took almost another 5,000 years for someone to invent the first roller skate. Consider the colorful history of this wonderful mode of transportation during October, Roller Skating Month.

The first recorded instance of someone affixing wheels to shoes came in 1760 when John Joseph Merlin embedded metal wheels into his shoes. Merlin planned to debut his invention at a London masquerade party. He wanted to shock the party-goers by gliding into the salon while playing the violin. Unfortunately, Merlin hadn't yet perfected his skating technique and his wheels were not engineered to turn, so instead of gliding gracefully, he sped into a mirror and crashed, suffering injuries to both his body and his pride.

Over the next few decades, various designs of roller skates showed up everywhere from Germany to France and Sweden and London, but they all suffered the same design flaw: the fixed wheels made it almost impossible to turn. Finally, in New York City in 1863, James Leonard Plimpton invented his "quad skates" or "rocker skates." His skates consisted of four wheels attached to springy rubber cushions that allowed wearers to easily turn by shifting their weight from side to side. Plimpton capitalized on his invention by establishing the first roller rink at his New York City furniture business. He also organized the first roller skating club, the New York Roller Skating Association, to both promote his new sport and sell his skates.

By the 1880s, roller skates were a booming industry. Rinks opened across America and all around the world. By the 1950s, food was being delivered to cars by roller-skating "carhops" at drive-ins. And by the 1970s, the roller revolution reached its height. It was no surprise when, in 1983, President Ronald Reagan declared October Roller Skating Month.
